The human resource function adds significant value to an organization by managing a company’s most valuable resource – its people. HR professionals attract, recruit and hire staff, working to match them with positions that are the right fit for the employer and the employee. They provide details about company programs and benefits, maintain employment records, work with payroll and handle administrative duties that directly impact staff. In the Human Resource program, learn employment law, training and development of employees, compensation and benefits administration, labor relations supporting bargaining agreements, and wellness and safety initiatives.

- Prepare for jobs such compensation benefits coordinator, training and development coordinator or human relations payroll assistant.

- The Society of Human Resource Management (SHRM) – student chapter provides networking opportunities and resources in the human resource field.
